MILAN'S ERROR COSTLY

By WILLIAM PEET.

Charlottesville, Va. March 25.—"I've got that bird," shouted Zeb. Milan, play-ing third base for the Nationals this afternoon as he cambed under White's pop fly only to drop it; after that four runs came in, and it looked as if the Virginia boys would repeat Friday's victory over the professionals, but a flock of well-bunched hits later helped Griff's bunch snatch a 2-to-6 game. Eddie Foster was given a short vaca-tion to visit relatives in Richmond and Foster's absence paved the way for Milan try his luck at third base, a position has just been itching to play for some time.

"I'll show you fellows how the bag should be played." chirped Milan before the game, and although his error proved costly, he was just as cocky as could be after it was all over. "I'd have got that ball if the sun hadn't been in my eyes." was his alibi. The sun at the time being hidden behind a pack of clouds. The ball game was witnessed by the largest crowd thus far in attendance, attracted probably because the day ohnson was down to pitch.

Johnson worked four innings and ielded two hits. He did not extend him-yielded two hits. He did not extend himself at any stage and put absolutely nothing on the bail.

Following Johnson came Bert Gallia, who also handed up straight fast ones for the collegians to hit, which they did with a vengeance, lumping half a dozen safe blows in the afth chapter, which scored five runs. "After this bombardment Gallia was told he could throw a few curves, and the bombardment ceased as quickly as it had started. No more runs for the university boys.
